EDITORIAL

The Dragon's Roar would like to know why the administration of Narimasu High School was refused the request that one bus from each air base stay until the special period is over. The fun and extra-curricular activities take place during the special period. If we Dragons don't want the school divided and school spirit cut to the core it will be up to us, especially the air base kids, to talk to the right people (parents included). Get them to get the buses for us.

While you're at it, there's a need for more clubs around Narimasu, especially hobby and language groups. It's up to those who feel a need for a certain type of club to round up other interested people. With a solid group behind you, you talk to Mr. Lay, do a little organization, and are on the way to success.

There's been a rumor going around school that in the grueling race for first place in the lunch line at the cafeteria only 18 teen-agers were peeled off the floor in the past five weeks. Though this is great news, we think the toll the stampede takes could be sizeably reduced.

The administration has received a couple of complaints about immature behavior on school buses. Let's not get buses segregated by fighting and throwing eggs out windows. Come on kids, we're in High School to grow up, let's not be babies.

Narimasu High is a great school, let's fight to make it better. If you have any ideas about making it better, tell your Student Council class rep.

'Egypt' Comes to NHS

The Narimasu rotunda took on the atmosphere of ancient Egypt as the Narimasu Historian Society exhibit, "The Story of the Ten Commandments", opened Tuesday, September 23.

The exhibit was the first of several information services planned by the society including another such exhibition which is tentatively scheduled for November and which takes the title, "The Art of Ancient Rome".

The display, which includes replicas of the Egyptian Sphinx and the tablets of testimony "written with the hand of God" which were inscribed in "Pre-Canaanite", was previously exhibited in the Piccadilly Theater in downtown Tokyo in connection with the showing of the motion picture, "The Ten Commandments." It was brought to Narimasu through arrangement with Paramount Pictures Limited, producers of the picture which enjoyed a year's run in Tokyo.

The Roman art exhibit is to be presented through the courtesy of the Italian Embassy and the Yomori Press and like the Egyptian display will include replicas and illustrations along its theme. The Roman exhibit will, however, be on a larger scale than was the Egyptian display.

Reporter Swoons
As Anka Croons

As rock and roller Paul Anka made his way across the wide waters a chance gave way for an interview with the famous Canadian.

His daily show at the Kokusai Theater in Tokyo, attracted among other things, a barrage of reporters and squealing girls. Fitting into both of these categories was DRAGON'S ROAR columnist, Karen Capell. According to eye-witness accounts, upon the entrance of Anka, the reporter jumped to her feet screaming, "My idol!", as she swooned and tramped on the feet of said eye-witness. The assignment of the would-be journalist was not, however, the destruction of fellow Anka fans but an interview with her "idol".

She finally got around to the latter when the management granted her permission to go back stage with the now ailing eye-witness. Upon reaching the ivy-league clad Anka, the thumping of the reporter's excited heart drowned out the answers to any questions she may have asked.

With pencil in hand she made one last attempt to overcome her emotions and tackle the big story. This was, however, a futile effort as she had unwittingly neglected to sharpen the writing implement which wouldn't have helped the problem as in her present condition she was completely unable to distinguish the end of the pencil used for writing.

Giving up in desperation she threw herself at him thrusting the pencil into his hands begging for his autograph. This, too, was of little assistance to the DRAGON'S ROAR as the paper provided for his signature was not a check book.

Forcing her way through the throngs of fellow worshippers she finally reached the city room of the DRAGON'S ROAR and upon presenting her "scoop" she was, needless to say, not too well received. She has not since been available for comment as she was last reported in a state of shock. So regrettably we have no material on the Paul Anka story.

Karen's
Kolumn

By KAREN CAPELL

Did ya'll see those girls out in the hall after school every day practicing to try out for cheerleading? Some guys were standing around giving directions 'cause they knew so much about it. Didn't you see how well Frank Wilson Ray Rovanske, Smokey Edwards, Gary Blackwell, Bob Wilson, Butch McCartney did as cheerleaders in the Student Council election assembly?

Well, kids, you don't have to worry about getting a new school at Yamato this year. There has been a proposal that a high school be established, but the plan is still under consideration, and it will not be decided to build the school this year. So, settle down to a stay at Narimasu for this year, at least.

There is a certain boy from M.A.A.G. who believes you have to be tall to get ahead. He even goes to the extreme of wearing elevated shoes. Don't fret, little boy, Paul Anka is only five feet or so, and look where he is. Doesn't that make you feel better, Ray?

Could someone tell us who this Steve Robbins is from Tachi that doesn't like his name in print concerning his love life?

We must compliment Helen and Larry, and Tim and Jerry on lasting through the summer. Nice going!! It's too bad about Larry's broken ankle though.

Tachi's making with the Southern accent nowadays. We don't blame you much either, 'cause from what we hear, you have a real cool belle. She comes straight from Texas with blond hair and everything.

"I'm sure some of you saw the practice game the other day. Gads, if they nearly kill each other in those games, just think what they will do to the other team in the regular games. Keep up the good work, Dragons!"

Grant Heights has a royal court now. Yes, you read right, the Heights has a queen, king, and everything, just ask Linda Todd.

The last night of the Paul Anka Show at the Kokusai Theater, Eddie Cox, Pat Schrader, Dee Johnston, Corrine Crispell, Shellah House, Gary Blackwell, Tommy Roberts, and Paul Shohan (both alumni) went down. They met up with Pat Hendry, Victor and Jo Ann Rykken from Wash Heights. Was it fun riding around in a convertible with the top down in the rain after the show? And with ten people in the car?

Hope to see ya'll at all the football games we have. We'll win them all if we go and support our team. We can have a blast, so see you there.

Enough gab for one time, so until we see you again, let us leave ya'll with this last word: If you can't say anything nice about a person, don't say anything at all.

PTA Visits NHS

Some eighty-seven members of Asakuragi Junior High School, a school of the Asaka district near the Parent-Teachers Association of Camp Drake, visited Narimasu on Sept. 24.

After observing morning activities at N.H.S. they visited several homes in Grant Heights.
